Richard Stup is a Senior Extension Associate with Penn State's Dairy Alliance. He is responsible for educational programs in human resource management. Mr. Stup reaches dairy producers directly through educational workshops and by cooperating with the educational efforts of extension personnel and private industry advisors. He also conducts professional development courses for industry and extension, focusing on the advisor's role in dairy farm human resource management. Mr. Stup is involved in workforce development projects to teach advanced management and technical skills to dairy employees.

Prior to joining the Dairy Alliance, Mr. Stup operated his own business as a dairy management consultant in affiliation with Renaissance Nutrition. He acted as an advisor in several dairy modernization and expansion projects, and assisted producers with employee training and organization in addition to his nutrition consulting responsibilities. Mr. Stup has international experience in production agriculture throughout the United States, Latin America, and Europe.

Mr. Stup earned his M.S. degree from Penn State University in Agricultural Education. He holds a B.A. in History with a minor in International Agriculture, also from Penn State.
